BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Dr. Larry D. Mathis

Dr. Larry D. Mathis is a Senior Executive Coach for Ethos Leadership Group, LLC, an executive coaching and employee training consultancy with clients from corporate businesses, institutions of higher learning, non-profit organizations, and political campaigns.

Larry is a professor at Amridge University in Montgomery, Alabama, where he teaches graduate courses in community and social systems, social & multicultural counseling, and crisis counseling. Larry also teaches at Freed-Hardeman University in Henderson, Tennessee, where his course load includes graduate courses in leadership for non-profit organizations and assessment skills for leaders. Larry is a sought-after facilitator on topics including non-profit management, strategic planning for non-profit organizations, and resource development for non-profit organizations.

Prior to engaging in full-time teaching and consulting, Larry served as CEO of The Zambia Project – an organization that provides humanitarian assistance to the people of Zambia using methods that are responsible, meaningful, culturally relevant, and sustainable. He also served as CEO of African Christian Schools Foundation – an organization that trains professional and lay ministers in various regions of Africa. Larry also has extensive experience in non-profit leadership from his career in ministry that spanned more than two decades and crossed five states.

Larry holds a Doctorate of Ministry, Master of Divinity, and three Master's degrees. He is completing a Master's degree in public administration and has earned certificates in non-profit management and healthcare administration and planning.

Larry has published more than forty articles, hosted seventy television programs, and conducted radio programs that reached over 200,000 households each week.

Larry is married to Sharon and they have 2 children and 2 grandchildren. When not teaching or working with Ethos, Larry enjoys playing guitar, reading, and working around his five-acre homestead.
